BRAVEST DEED OF THE WAR.

THE lines of the Union army were closing around Petersburg like a shroud of iron, when General Lee resolved to break and drive them back, if possible. To that end he ordered an attack in force to be made on General Grant's line of circumvallation on July 19, 1864.

The point selected for assault was in the vicinity of an old country inn called "The Yellow Tavern."

The order was that the attack should be made just before the dawn of day, the time most favorable for a surprise, "when deep sleep falleth on man." It was the experience, however, of many Confederate officers charged with the duty of attacking in the gray of the morning that it was difficult to bring their troops into line at that early hour. Although they were generally "but in the gristle and not yet hardened into the bone of manhood," they were in one sense, at least, not of the rising generation.

Hence it was that General Johnston Hagood, whose brigade of South Carolinians was assigned to the right of the attacking force found that daylight had broken before he could align his command. General Hagood was as true a soldier as ever drew a sword in battle; to him the path of duty was the path of honor, and although he saw that his brigade was in plain view of the Union troops, who had already manned their intrenchments, he ordered it to advance to the assault. It had to cross a space of about 250 yards in width, which had an undulating surface, and the broken nature of the ground afforded some shelter until it debouched upon a level highway, within seventy yards of the works.

It then met with a terrific fire of artillery and rifles, but it was composed of seasoned veterans and never faltered. Where the dead fell the living stepped; and their leveled bayonets soon sparkled within twenty feet of the line of intrenchments. There the brigade came to an involuntary halt, for before it lay a wide, deep ditch, half full of water, which it had no means of crossing. Unable to advance, yet unwilling to retreat without orders, every soldier delivered his hopeless fire with the energy of despair.

As a merciful suggestion, no doubt prompted by admiration for a body of brave men, doomed otherwise to certain slaughter, the Union soldiers called out to them to surrender; but the call was unheeded. At that deadly juncture a mounted officer was seen to emerge from the sally-port of an earth-work at a re-entering angle of the line of intrenchments, nearly opposite to the center of the brigade. He galloped up to the color bearer of the South Carolina regiment, and holding out his right hand, demanded the surrender of the colors. Although mounted, the uniform and shoulder straps of the daring Union officer indicated that he was a captain of infantry. He was, apparently, about thirty years of age, with a noble and handsome face, and tall, heroic form.

The color sergeant, seemingly dazed, or perhaps paralyzed by the sublime effrontery of the demand, surrendered the colors.

The flag was especially dear to the regiment for it had been presented by the ladies of the district in which the regiment was raised, and it had been borne aloft with honor on many battlefields. It was a state flag with the arms of South Carolina upon it, and a counterpart of that which the famous Palmetto regiment in the Mexican war had planted on the walls of the capital of Mexico, the
